

ONLINE COMMUNITY MOBILIZATION TRAINING FOR ENGINEERS WITHOUT BORDERS

Our popular short-course designed specifically for Engineers Without Borders is now available online! Combining live face-to-face discussions with offline content you can complete on your own schedule, this course makes our powerful community mobilization curriculum accessible to anyone with an internet connection.

"The overall process was good, but for my particular project, I got a lot of benefit from the the anecdotal examples from the facilitators own experiences. They helped me picture how we might better interact with the community for our project."

Focusing on both the theory of community development and the practical methods for enhancing trust, communication, and participation between EWB chapters and their partner communities, this course consists of 4 two-hour long evening discussions starting on Monday and ending Thursday.

Discussions are live where each student can see and hear the instructor and other students (requires earphones and web-camera). Prior to each discussion session, students will be required to complete approximately 2-hours of offline preparation using the offline course packet for each session.

THIS COURSE WILL HELP YOU:

- Build stronger relationships with partner communities based on trust, solidarity and mutual accountability.
- Gain greater insight into the realities of people living in impoverished communities.
- Enhance clear and honest communication with communities.
- Promote better working relationships within your chapter.
- Learn and share experiences with other EWB chapters.
- More effectively manage the expectations of beneficiaries and donors.
